Visiting Scholar Programs

Overview The Elliott School invites applications from U.S. and international scholars for research and writing on topics related to the substantive focuses of our research centers and affiliated programs. Visiting scholars participate fully in the intellectual life of the Elliott School and The George Washington University, special events, lectures, workshops, conferences, and other activities. Interested researchers may apply to one or more of the Elliott School's centers and institutes (described below) for consideration for appointment as Visiting Scholars. Selected applicants will be nominated by the director of the relevant center or institute for consideration by the Dean.

Center for International Science and Technology Policy http://www.gwu.edu/~cistp/
The Center for International Science and Technology Policy (CISTP) conducts cutting-edge research on the policy issues that affect science and technology around the world. CISTP is widely recognized for its research on Science, Technology, and Innovation Public Policy; Space Policy; Technology and Industry Dynamics; and Information Technology. Details on the CISTP visiting scholar program are available at http://www.gwu.edu/~cistp/about/visiting.cfm

Institute for European, Russian and Eurasian Studies http://www.gwu.edu/~ieresgwu/
The Institute for European, Russian and Eurasian Studies (IERES) advances the study of Europe and Eurasia through courses, research, events, and publications. The Institute combines academic rigor with policy engagement, promotes interdisciplinary perspectives, and recognizes that Europe, Russia, and Eurasia cannot be understood in isolation from each other or from global trends. The principal disciplines at IERES are political science, economics, history, languages, literature, film studies, anthropology, sociology, public policy, and geography. Information on the IERES visiting scholar application is available at http://www.gwu.edu/~ieresgwu/about/visiting.cfm

Institute for Global and International Studies http://www.gwu.edu/~igis
The Institute for Global and International Studies (IGIS) promotes research and programs on a range of critical contemporary global issues including global governance, gender, development, and social justice. IGIS hosts three affiliated programs: the Global Gender Program (GGP); Culture in Global Affairs (CIGA); and the Diaspora Studies Program. IGIS encourages analysis and scholarship across disciplines. Scholars should contact the IGIS director at igis@gwu.edu regarding opportunities for research affiliation.

Institute for International Economic Policy http://www.gwu.edu/~iiep
The Institute for International Economic Policy (IIEP) serves as a catalyst for high quality, multi-disciplinary, and non-partisan research and analysis related to poverty and development economics; international trade; international finance; and economic globalization. IIEP's guiding principle is to identify international problems that matter most to society and to which economic analysis can contribute. IIEP's current research priorities include: Adaptation to Climate Change; Ultra Poverty; China's Economic Development and U.S.-China Relations; and Global Economic Governance. For more details on the visiting scholar program at IIEP, visit http://www.gwu.edu/~iiep/about/visiting.cfm
Institute for Middle East Studies
http://www.gwu.edu/~imes/
The Institute for Middle East Studies (IMES) fosters research, dialogue, and the development of an intellectual community focused on the modern Middle East, geographically defined as the Arab world, Turkey, Israel, and Iran. To this end, IMES encourages intellectual collaboration among members of the GW community interested in the Middle East, between GW research institutes, and with other organizations in the United States and around the world. In promoting and publicizing new work on the Middle East, IMES aims to deepen understanding of this critical region among scholars, students, and the broader public. For information on the visiting scholar program at IMES, please visit http://www.gwu.edu/~imes/about/visiting.cfm

Institute for Public Diplomacy and Global Communication
http://www.gwu.edu/~ipdgc/
The Institute for Public Diplomacy and Global Communication (IPDGC) is a leader in research, practice, training, and innovative thinking in the areas of global communication and public diplomacy. IPDGC's interests include a wide array of issues related to the study and practice of global communication and public diplomacy. It has five core areas of focus: New Media, Security, and Public Diplomacy; the Role of Women and Gender in Security, Communication, and Diplomacy; U.S. Foreign Policy Priorities; "Whole of Government," Interagency Challenges, especially in the areas of Public Diplomacy and Strategic Communication; and Global Perspectives and Approaches to Public Diplomacy. For information on visiting scholars, please contact IPDGC at ipdgc@gwu.edu.

Institute for Security and Conflict Studies
http://www.gwu.edu/~iscs/
The Institute for Security and Conflict Studies (ISCS) advances scholarly research and education, improving public understanding of key national and international security issues, and informing the development of national and international security policy. The ISCS leverages its faculty’s strengths in international relations theory, nuclear weapons and non-proliferation policy, energy security, key regions of the globe, and the analysis of security policy. The Institute pursues research in traditional and emerging areas of international security policy. Priority areas include nuclear weapons policy, energy security, and the implications of the rise of China and India. Information on the visiting scholar program at ISCS is on-line at http://www.gwu.edu/~iscs/about/visitingscholars.cfm

The Sigur Center for Asian Studies
http://www.gwu.edu/~sigur/
The Sigur Center’s mission is to increase the quality and broaden the scope of scholarly research and publication on Asia, promote U.S.-Asian scholarly interaction, and educate a new generation of students, scholars, analysts, and policymakers. The Sigur Center promotes scholarship and policy through an active program of research, publishing, teaching, public events and policy engagement. It is affiliated with several programs, including the Rising Powers Initiative; the India Initiative; the Friends of Korea; the China Policy Program; the Memory and Reconciliation in the Asia-Pacific project; Partnerships for International Strategies in Asia; the Taiwan Education and Research Program; and the US-Japan-South Korea Legislative Exchange Program. For details on the visiting scholar program at the Sigur Center, visit http://www.gwu.edu/~sigur/about/scholar_pgm.cfm

05/02/2012